He received a grant of land and became a merchant and a shareholder of the Bank of Van Diemen's Land. He formed a company and merchant business in Hobart Town trading as Lempriere & Co. which failed in 1827, but he had left the company the previous year. $9,000

The Tasmanian Bank was formed by J.T.Gellibrand, the former Attorney-General of Tasmania, and his son, and opened in Hobart Town between 31 July and 4 August 1826.

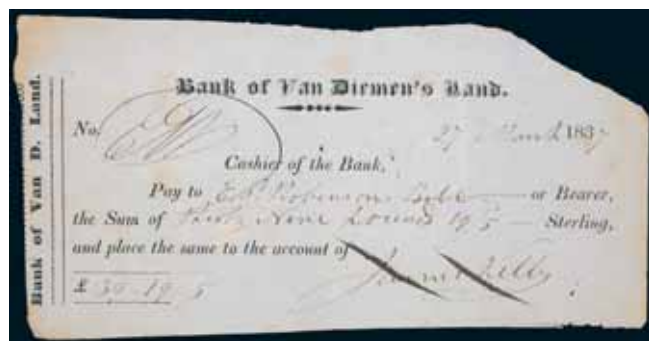

The bank at first issued notes ('Post Bills') of the Spanish dollar series, but following the passing of the 'Sterling Money Act of 1826' on 22 September, it replaced its notes with Sterling notes at once, but forgeries circulated almost immediately.

Not long after its establishment, the bank's affairs became heavily oriented in favour of directors and their friends, creating a business monopoly in Hobart Town. This resulted in the second dividend paid being 42% per annum.

The bank however, did not do any extensive business, and closed in early 1829 when Gellibrand transferred his interests to whaling.

The Commercial Bank took over the premises of the Tasmanian Bank in Hobart, opening on 29 June 1829.

James Kelly (1791-1859), sealer, pilot and harbourmaster, was born on 24 December 1791 in Parramatta. He travelled extensively including circumnavigating Van Diemen's Land, and discovering Port Davey and Macquarie Harbour. Kelly was appointed pilot and harbourmaster at the Derwent and later as pilot he was engaged in whaling and with additional land ownership he became an important citizen in Hobart.

Kelly suffered personal and shipping losses in the 1830s and by the 1840s with the depression his losses were heavy forcing him to assign his property to creditors and later accept employment from the port authorities again. He died in Hobart on 20 April 1859.
