This lot and the following three lots relate to a significant person in the field of engineering. Mr A.J. Corbett, born at Inverness in 1873 and educated in Scotland, qualified on 31 October 1898 with the Board of Trade as a First Class Engineer in the Merchant Service. He had two stints of service with engineering companies in Singapore, one of which involved two years service in Bangkok. After a third engagement in Singapore he resigned and opened his own engineering business in Bangkok, A.J. Corbett & Co. Some of the important works undertaken by this firm include the Menam Bridge for the Royal Siamese State Railways, the Engine Sheds for the same government department and the Yek Bridge constructed in 1908. Alexander Corbett and his wife, Isabella, left Thailand to settle in Australia and he died in Tasmania in 1925.

Painting of the convict transport 'Charlotte', gouache, 70cm x 50cm, by Philip J.Gray. Framed and glazed.

$1,450

The painting depicts the 'Charlotte' (foreground) and H.M.Ship 'Sirius' in Port Jackson, 1788. The 'Charlotte' was one of several merchant ships employed into naval service to form what we know as the 'First Fleet' which arrived in Botany Bay, and a little later Port Jackson, N.S.W. in January 1788 carrying convicts. Lightly armed with only six small cannons, the 'Charlotte' was not a warship, but rather a purpose built merchant cargo vessel of 345 tonnes, 105 feet long and 28 feet beam. She was built on the Thames in 1784. On board were 88 male and 20 female convicts. The artist has exhibited widely in the traditional maritime genre, and works have sold in Australia, America and the United Kingdom. Some of his works are held in the Latrobe Library, whilst others were released as limited edition prints.

They then bailed-up MacDonald's Station and the Inn at Wantabadgery. After a shoot-out they escaped to McGlede's farm where another shoot-out took place. Constable Edward Webb Bowen was shot dead and Nesbitt and another gang member, Wernicke, were killed. Moonlite was caught off guard and the rest surrendered. All were tried for the murder of the Constable, found guilty and sentenced to hang. Two had their punishment commuted to life imprisonment and Moonlite and Rogan were hanged on 20 January 1880. Moonlite went to the gallows wearing a ring made from Nesbitt's hair and asked to be buried with him. This request was rejected and he was buried at Rookwood Cemetery however in 1995 his body was exhumed and buried alongside his "friend" James Nesbitt at Gundagai Cemetery.
