THE BORROWDALE SEAL

628*

The Borrowdale seal, of Captain Hobson Reed, 1787, a small (44mm x 30mm) hand-made oval fob seal in silver, fitted into a swivelling suspension to enable impressing of seal, with leaf decorated, scroll mounting suspension loop together with fitted screw for securing into rim of seal to stop it swiveling when not in use, obverse of seal features an engraved ship under sail upon waves, below inscribed in running script, 'Success to the / Borrowdale', wreath of leaves around, reverse, inscribed with monogram initials 'RH' (in reverse so they will register HR when used as seal) decorated with sprigs of leaves and around rim with leaf decoration. Extremely fine and a unique piece of Australian First Fleet history.

$35,000

Provenance : Discovered in 1999 at an antique jewellery shop in Dorset in the historic Saxon town of Wareham, famous for being the burial place of Lawrence of Arabia.

The Borrowdale was one of the three supply ships with the First Fleet of eleven ships that sailed from Portsmouth, England on 13 May 1787 under the command of Captain Arthur Phillip. The voyage to Australia took over eight months with the first ships arriving at Botany Bay on 18 January 1788. This site was decided to be unsuitable for establishing a settlement so the fleet travelled a short distance north and after entering a quite cove with an ample supply of fresh water decided that this was to be the chosen site for the new convict settlement and it was named Sydney, in honour of Lord Sydney.

The Borrowdale was a fully rigged wooden sailing ship of approximately 270 tons built at Sunderland in 1785. She was seventy five feet long with a twenty two foot beam and carried twenty four passengers and crew. The owners were Leightons. Contracted by William Richards Jnr, the fleet contractor, she was under command of Master, Captain Readthorn Hobson Reed and Second Mate was William Richards. In internet notes from David Hill, '1788 - The Brutal Truth of the First Fleet' the following specific mentions are made relating to the Borrowdale; a) During the voyage to Australia, Borrowdale lost sail (foretop-gallant-mast) on 26 July. b) She lost ship's boat in October in rough weather near Penguin Island. c) Report of livestock losses, especially chickens from disease, 16 November. d) After leaving Cape of Good Hope the fleet split with Borrowdale staying with slower half under command of John Hunter. e) Arrived with slow half of fleet at Botany Bay on 20 January one day after faster half of the fleet. f) On 4 June participated in ceremonies staged for King's birthday. 'The King's ships, Sirius and Supply, fired twenty one guns at sunrise, at one o'clock and at sunset. Immediately after the King's ships had ceased firing at one o'clock, the Borrowdale, Friendship, Fishburne, Golden Grove and Prince of Wales fired five guns each.'

Borrowdale departed Sydney on 14 July 1788 for England as one of the ships in government employ for the round trip under the direction of Lieutenant John Shortland, agent for the Transport Department. The other ships in the convoy were Alexander, Friendship and Prince of Wales. Because it was winter and because they were unable to take fresh food from Sydney, as there was none to spare, the ships decided to head north where the prospects for taking on fresh food were greater. Two days out from Sydney bad weather and heavy winds struck so all four ships separated. Borrowdale abandoned the northerly route and headed south under New Zealand and then on to Rio de Janeiro. By the time the ship reached Rio five sailors were dead and the other sailors were so weakened by scurvy that the harbour master and other sailors at Rio had to board her to bring her in to berth. The Prince of Wales carrying Lieutenant Shortland also reached Rio. After signing on additional fresh crew, the Borrowdale in company with The Prince of Wales set sail for England with the Borrowdale arriving on 26 March, two days after her sailing partner, thus these two becoming the first of the First Fleet ships to return. Borrowdale carried Governor Arthur Phillip's dispatches including voyage details, and details of the Sydney site and conditions. A copy of the dispatches were sent to King George III. News of the ships' return from Australia attracted widespread coverage in the newspapers. However, after the dispatches carried by the Borrowdale were released, far more detailed stories appeared in the newspapers. The Borrowdale had a short life after this. Seven months later on 30 October 1789 she sank in a massive gale off Great Yarmouth, Roads, Norfolk with all hands lost except one. Who was this one? Was it the captain, Hobson Reed? No records of a name can be found but no matter what, Captain Hobson Reed appears to have made the return voyage to Australia as Master of the ship Borrowdale and the fob seal probably sailed with him.

At the time of the First Fleet voyage, in the late eighteenth century, it was not uncommon for new ships and significant voyages to be commemorated with a special item bearing the words 'success to the (name of the ship)'. In the book, 'Forget Me Not' by Sim Comfort, three such coins are illustrated, 'Success To The Nancy' on pages 15 and 16 for the period 1760-1780 and 'Success To The Mercury' on page 100 and 'Success To The Old Lion' on page 111, both for the period 1787-1790. Another coin depicting the convict ship Friendship with similar engravings to the Borrowdale seal is held by the National Maritime Museum, Greenwich, London (Item No.E4938-1/2). This exhibit features a ship under sail upon waves and below the inscription 'Success to the Friendship / 1787' and on the reverse the initials 'FW' (Francis Walton, Master of the Friendship). Floral decoration also appears on the reverse of this coin and this is a theme which appears on many of the known 'Success to...' commemorative pieces. Being almost identical it is speculative, but probable, that the Borrowdale seal was commissioned by Hobson Reed's wife or the ship owners' as a commemorative of the historic voyage to Australia. The will of Hobson Reed dated 12 December 1786 was proved by his widow on 28 January 1790 so obviously Hobson had died around that time. Therefore, was he the one survivor of the Yarmouth Roads sinking? There are many questions to answer but ultimately the Borrowdale fob seal found its way to the Wareham antique shop and the rest is history. A First Fleet relic returns to Sydney.

Together with considerable documentation including a photocopy of the will for Hobson Reed, Mariner of Saint Paul's Shadwell, Middlesex and a comprehensive research paper titled, 'The Borrowdale Seal' by Miles Stevenson.

Missionary Ship 'The Duff', 1796, in white metal (37mm) (M.H.449a), obverse, The Duff under sail, around 'The Duff, Capt: James Wilson.' in the exergue, 'Sail'd 10th Aug. / 1796', reverse, inscription 'With / Missionaries / To The South Seas / For The Conversion / Of The / Heathens'. Some toning, traces of mint bloom, extremely fine and rare.

The London Missionary Society, a non-denominational group, was formed in England in 1795. After funds were raised and Captain James Wilson offered to sail missionaries to their destination for free, the society was able to afford a boat, The Duff. In 1796 The Duff set sail with eighteen crew and thirty missionaries intent on converting the natives.

Convict free pardon document, No 112, granted to Judith Kelly, signed by Governor Lachlan Macquarie on the twenty fifth day of October 1811 and registered in the Secretary's Office by Thomas Campbell, document 375mm x 319 on paper bearing the watermark, 'Chilton Mill / 1805' and a crowned cartouche, Britannia inside and King George III cipher below, with Royal seal impressed into attached paper with ribbon attached, glued to the back of the document is a contemporary hand-written note explaining the criminal history of Judith Kelly. The document appears to have been printed by George Howe, the contracted Government Printer at the time. Nearly full backing paper, some missing areas along two of the folds, foxing, otherwise very good and a rare and historic document.

Judith Kelly was tried in the Central Criminal Court, London along with her accomplice, Sarah Pitcher. The Court Hearings no.456 'Judith Kelly was indicted that she, on the 29th day of July previously, knowing for that on the 29th July had in her custody and possession a certain forged note, purporting to be a bank note for the payment of 1, she knowing it to be forged. To this indictment the prisoner pleaded - Guilty. Sentence on 17 September 1806: Transportation 14 Years.' (1806.09.17.-33) There were other indictments relating to the same incident but she was acquitted as the Prosecution declined to offer any evidence. Judith Kelly and Sarah Pitcher were among a total of 113 female and 4 male convicts Transported to New South Wales on the convict transport ship, Sydney Cove, departing Falmouth on 11 January 1807 and arriving at Port Jackson on 18 June 1807. It appears that Judith had an uneventful time serving as a washerwoman. She received a Ticket of Leave in 1807 and in 1810 she applied to the Governor for her sentence to be mitigated. Subsequently, because of her 'good conduct', she was granted a Free Pardon by Governor Macquarie, signed on 25 October, 1811. Judith Kelly was able to make it back to England or at least her Free Pardon document did because it was found in possession of a recently arrived woman claiming to be Elizabeth Jones who along with an associate, Jane Smith, was apprehended in London and a search revealed them to be in possession of several counterfeit notes. The two women were tried under exactly the same indictment as Judith Kelly and her associate in 1806 with the same result of Transportation 14 Years. Was Elizabeth Jones in reality Judith Kelly operating under a false name? No evidence could be found in this regard but indeed if they are one and the same person then this is almost certainly a rare occurrence for one person to be transported twice for the same type of crime, particularly a female. Convict love token, (on a cartwheel penny ?), obverse, stippled inscription 'John / Woodcock / Lagd for / 7 years / Oct 26 / 1816', reverse, incomplete but appears to show the remnants of a Masonic triangle with the letters 'Th' and 'HB' therein. Fine/very good and rare as records of known tokens indicate that this is the earliest token known to remain in private hands.

$7,000

Johnathan Woodcock described in records as a sawyer or labourer was born in Hertford, England in 1796. In 1813 he received a 7 year sentence for larceny and was transported to Australia arriving on the 'Fanny' in 1816. Records show that he successfully applied to marry Amelia Bowing in 1819 and that a son, James, was born in 1820. He received a certificate of freedom for his original sentence on 4th June 1821 but was again back before the Sydney Criminal Court in June of 1822 when he was again sentenced to 7 years. His name appears on the convict musters of 1822, 1825 and 1828 and show that he resided at Port Macquarie during this period. He was eventually freed on the 26th June 1829 and appears to have remained out of further trouble until his death in 1849.

633*

Convict love token, (on a cartwheel penny?), obverse, the stippled portrait of a young man identified by the legend as 'W VALE.23.DEATH RECORDED 1828', reverse, stippled inscription 'WHEN / THIS. you .SEE / REMEMBER. ME / WHEN. BANISHED / FROM. My. COUNTR(Y) / A. PRESENT. FOR / ANN CARRIER / AGED 19 / 1828'. Holed for suspension, good fine and rare, one of only a few surviving convict tokens relating to women.

$7,000

Ann Carrier was described as a housemaid and nurse at her trial in Warwick, England on the 9th August 1828. However, she obviously had other means of income as she was convicted of stealing in Birmingham 'from the person in a house of ill-fame'. According to the author Babette Smith in her book 'A Cargo of Women', in which Ann has several mentions, it was not an uncommon crime for working women to be convicted of stealing money from their clients when they were in a vulnerable state. She arrived in Sydney on the 'Princess Royal' in May 1829 and was assigned to Sarah Wyer before being transferred to M. Smith and then later to Captain H Steel. Ann's English boyfriend (W Vale?) was long dead, buried and forgotten when in 1831 she applied to marry John Ward, however this union did not proceed. But in April 1833 she successfully married Peter Tyler a convict printer employed by the Sydney Monitor and who had earlier been caught up in a bitter campaign against the unpopular Governor Darling. Records show that Peter Tyler died in Sydney in July 1842 but Ann's later years remain a mystery.

632*

Convict love token, (on a cartwheel penny?), obverse, engraved 'Elizabeth Taylor / to / Charles Taylor / God bless you my / Dear', reverse, engraved 'A token of Love / to / My dear Husband / 1827' between the 18 and 27, two overlapping love hearts with arrow through. Nearly very fine.

$7,000

Found in Sydney this keepsake which drips with emotion appears to be the only surviving token given by a wife to a husband to carry with him to Australia. Interestingly four Charles Taylor's arrived in Australia in the relevant time frame, however two can be confidently discounted due to age (15 years) and the point of disembarkation (Hobart). The third Charles Taylor, who was transported for life, arrived on the 'Asia' on the 19th November 1827 and appears in the Convict Muster of 1837 as a 29 year old. The emotion contained in the token would seem unlikely to apply to a husband who would have been nineteen in 1827. The final and strongest candidate for 'My dear Husband' is Charles Taylor who was transported for life on the 'Marquis of Hastings' on the 14th April 1827. His death at age 47 was recorded on the 18th August 1839 at Bathurst very soon after he was pardoned, and before he could be reunited with his dear wife.

Sir Henry Edward Fox Young C.B. (1803-1870) colonial administrator, served in various colonial positions in Demerara, British Guiana and St Lucia until knighted in 1847. He was then appointed Lt-Governor of the eastern districts of the Cape Colony but in June transferred to South Australia. After a brief trip to England he returned to South Australia. In 1852 he alleviated the economic crisis caused by the Victorian goldfield discoveries and was in charge when the Adelaide Assay Office produced the Adelaide Pound gold coin in 1852. He examined the lower reaches of the Murray River in 1850 and in 1853 accompanied Francis Cadell on the voyage of his steamer Lady Augusta. In 1854 he was posted to Van Diemen's Land as Governor arriving in 1855. After much controversy he resigned in 1861 and returned to London. One of the roles he assumed was that of director and chairman of the Australian Mercantile Land & Finance Co. He died on 18 September 1870.

Walter Alfred Drabble was the son of a retired merchant, Walter D Drabble, who died in 1947. Drabble's Hardware was one of the iconic stores in Claremont. Established in 1885 the business moved into the newly built Drabble Building at 50 Bay View Terrace in 1924. It was a huge wholesale and retail business with storage sheds and a glazing department at the rear. Staffed by experienced tradesmen the store was a meeting place for all the local handymen and it was popular because some of the staff were also players from the Claremont Football Club, 'The Tigers'.

Sir Walter James Young, KBE (1872-1940), businessman, was born on 2 April 1872 at Moonta, South Australia, son of John Young, storekeeper and later pastoralist, and his wife Isabella, nee Russell. His younger brother was (Sir) Frederick William Young. Educated at Whinham College, North Adelaide, in 1887 Walter joined Elder Smith & Co., Adelaide. He made his first overseas tour for Elders in 1897, to England, America and Japan. Rising steadily, he became the firm's assistant manager (1906), general manager (1912) and managing director (1929). With Elders, he demonstrated a stability of judgement which largely accounted for his influence during and after World War I when, from the centre of Adelaide's business world, he advised and was consulted by State and Federal governments.
