In 1856 Julius Hogarth of the Sydney firm Hogarth & Erichsen, was commissioned to cut dies and strike medals - six gold, six silver and twelve bronze - for Major General (later Sir) Edward Macarthur, Lieutenant Governor of Victoria and eldest son of wool pioneer John Macarthur. Ludwig Becker, the German artist, who died five years later on the Burke & Wills expedition, had a hand in designing the medals. They were to be awarded 'for distinguished merit in the arts, either of peace or war'. James Macarthur of Camden arranged the whole transaction which cost £300. The motto in Latin reads 'either in war Victoria or in peace', the first motto of the colony. (Myatt & Hanley, Australian Coins, Notes & Medals, Sydney 1980, pp177-8).

$5,000

Ex Dr John M. Chapman Collection, Noble Numismatics Sale 88 (lot 757) and Spink Australia Sale 26 (lot 1851).

The steamship 'Admella' of 500 tons, was built in Glasgow in 1857. Taking her name from the first syllables of ADelaide, MELbourne and LAunceston, she commenced service between Adelaide and Melbourne in August 1858.

The Admella, with a ship's company of twenty eight, eighty one passengers, seven horses and general cargo, left Adelaide for Melbourne on Friday 5th August 1859. With a further three passengers and a fireman taken on at Semaphore, the complement now totalled one hundred and thirteen which included nineteen women and fifteen children.

Despite a heavy swell and fog experienced off Kangaroo Island, it was expected that the ship would be off Cape Northumberland before daylight the following day. The Captain believed the ship to be many miles off shore, but shortly before 5 a.m. on Saturday 5th August she struck a submerged reef with the swell lifting her firmly onto the rocks. Orders were given to prepare the lifeboats, but within fifteen minutes the ships had broken into three sections sweeping a number of passengers and all the horses into the sea.

Almost all the women and children were on the bow section with a number of other passengers clinging to the aft section. Distress rockets were fired, but to no avail. Daylight revealed a deserted coastline and a ship passing in the distance. Despite signals, this ship, 'Admella's sister ship 'Havilah', sailed on without seeing them. During the day a number of unsuccessful attempts were made to reach the shore just over a kilometre away but with tragic results. With no water and practically no food the survivors spent a hard night cold and continually drenched with spray. The sound of another ship, 'SS Bombay' passing close by without sighting them added to their misery. Next morning a number of passengers managed to cross by a rope from the fore to the aft section. Fifteen men made it across, although three men and two children were lost. No women made the attempt, remaining with their children and a few of the men. Within a few hours the bow section broke up and they were all lost. Eventually a raft manned by seamen managed to reach shore after a three hour battle in the rough seas. After regaining their strength, an all night journey through the scrub enabled them to reach the Cape Northumberland lighthouse and inform the head keeper of the disaster. The nearest post office was at Mount Gambier and contact was made with reports of the wreck being telegraphed to Adelaide and Melbourne. The nearest lifeboat was at Portland over three hundred kilometres away, but arrangements were made to transport a small boat from the lighthouse overland to the scene of the wreck. A salvaged boat from 'Admella' had also been repaired although rough seas prevented any rescue attempts being made. The pounding seas had by now forced the survivors to climb into the remaining rigging or cling to the side of the hull. Two fishermen from Robe and the 'SS Corio' from Adelaide had managed to reach the stricken vessel but were forced to lay off due to the sea state.

Early on Thursday 11th August 'Corio' launched her pilot boat and although the seven men crew battled for almost an hour they were forced to return to the beach. The fifty or so remaining survivors on 'Admella' made an unsuccessful attempt to build and launch another raft. They also saw similar attempts from the beach fail. 'SS Corio' was forced to depart owing to lack of coal. As she left, 'SS Ladybird' appeared towing the Portland lifeboat and a whaler, whilst 'SS Ant' arrived from Robe. At 9 a.m. the following day, the lifeboat pulled for the wreck. Several attempts to attach light lines by rockets failed and as the lifeboat lost six oars and her rudder destroyed as huge seas swept over them the crew returned exhausted to the 'Ladybird'. Another attempt was prepared but abandoned due to the weather. The following morning the ocean had subsided somewhat and the calmer seas allowed the lifeboat to approach and secure a line to the wreck. The survivors managed to reach the lifeboat and transferred to 'Corio's pilot boats. Although capsizing in the surf, all made it ashore. The 'Admella' lifeboat rescued another man who, however, was lost when it also capsized in the surf. Meanwhile the Portland lifeboat now managed to secure to the 'Admella' and a further eighteen men and one woman were rescued. Thus a mere twenty four from the original one hundred and thirteen managed to survive.

The rescue attempt had attracted fever pitch interest throughout the colonies and extra editions of newspapers reporting the rescue quickly sold out. Relief surged throughout the country when the survivors were safe. The seamen involved in the rescue were feted and treated as heroes. Relief funds were also established and special medals struck in commemoration. Many of the men who assisted at the rescue also received the Board of Trade bronze medal for 'Gallantry in Saving Life at Sea'.

John Van Agnew Bruce was born in Edinburgh, Scotland in 1822 and arrived in Victoria in April 1854. Having gained early railroading experience in Scotland he tendered for road construction contracts in Victoria, including the main road from Melbourne to Mount Alexander and the railway from Melbourne to Bendigo. He died in Essendon in April 1863 aged 41.

James Stewart Butters was born in Blair Gowrie, Perthshire, Scotland in 1832. His early employment was in a drygoods store. He arrived in Victoria in 1853, working in stores in Melbourne and Warrnambool. In 1856 Butters became a stock and share broker and gold buyer in partnership with W.G.Baillie and was among the first to introduce joint stock mining in Victoria. Butters had an involvement in the establishment of a stock exchange in 1860. He was a Melbourne City Councillor for the Lonsdale Ward becoming Mayor in 1867. The Alfred Hospital, Princes Bridge and Albert Park Lake all owe a debt to Butters, the foundation stone at Melbourne Town Hall bears his name. In 1868 Butters entered the Legislative Assembly as member for Portland but he left parliament to sail to Fiji in July 1870 where he was trustee of the Polynesia Co. On his return to Melbourne he opened the Victoria Club in 1876 and engaged in developing pastoral and mineral resources in Northern Australia. Butters was a leading Mason, a Vice President of the Caledonian Society and laid the foundation stone of the Welsh Church in Lonsdale Street. He died in Sandringham in September 1912.

John Vans Agnew Bruce (1822-1863) was born in Edinburgh and arrived in Victoria in 1854 where he tendered for road construction contracts. In 1857 a group of Gisborne residents petitioned him to stand for the Legislative Assembly seat of West Bourke but he was far too busy to enter politics. With W.C.Cornish he successfully contracted for the first 13 sections of the Melbourne-Murray River railway. The job was plagued with strikes (Bruce being a tough employer) so he imported 400 German masons to compete with local labour. In 1859 a select committee proved that Bruce was using inferior materials in an effort to maximise his profit out of the colonial government. The committee recommended that a closer watch be put on Bruce. He helped finance the Burke and Wills expedition and promoted Burke as the leader. Despite his merciless handling of labour he was to some degree philanthropic acting in 1863 as Chairman of the Irish Relief Committee. On completion of the railway contract he returned to Melbourne but died after an attack of apoplexy on 5 April 1863 aged 41.

He bought Longerenong Station at the junction of the Wimmera River and Yarriambiak Creek. Wilson supported the work of the Acclimatisation Society by experimenting with ostrich farming and breeding angora goats. He acquired many other properties, including Ercildoune Stud. He represented Wimmera in the Legislative Assembly 1861-64. He gave £30,000 to build a hall at Melbourne University. Wilson was President of the National Agricultural Society of Victoria in 1873 and was knighted in 1875. Later he retired to England.

Arthur John Alfred Baldock (1898-1950) author of Paradise Lost: And Its Critics, published 1961. In the Sydney Morning Herald, tuesday 12 June 1934, page 8 it was reported, 'The Senate of the University of Sydney at its meeting yesterday elected Mr. A. J. A. Waldock, lecturer in English, to the chair of English Literature, which has been vacant since the death of Professor J. Le Gay Brereton in February, 1933. The committee of advice in England and within the University concurred in recommending Mr. Waldock on all essential grounds.'

Professor Waldock is the son of the Rev Dr. A. J. Waldock, of Canberra, and a graduate of Sydney University. He took his B A degree in 1918, with first-class honours in English and history, won the Coulson and James Coutts scholarships for English, and the Fraser scholarship for history. He graduated M A in 1925, again taking first-class honours and the University medal. He was appointed an Instructor in English on the staff of the Royal Australian Naval College Jervis Bay, but after a few months returned to the University as a lecturer in English. He has since held that office, and has attained a high position in Australian literary scholarship.

Professor Waldock's chief publication is 'Hamlet - A Study in Critical Method,' about which the chief Shakespearean critics have spoken appreciatively. An equally striking achievement was Professor Waldock's 'Thomas Hardy and the Dynasts,' written as a lecture for the Australian English Association and printed only in that association's series of leaflets, but now being sought for republication in England.

Both Professor Waldock and Professor Le Gav Brereton were pupils of Professor Sir Mungo MacCallum, and the tradition of the School of Modern Literature studies created by him will, therefore, continue.'
