China, collector copies, silver one dollar (cf.K-225, W-115), (26.84g) (39.64mm). There are minor stylistic differences on and around the dragon's head and in the large scales on its back at 9 o'clock, which do not increase in size from top to bottom as they do on the authentic pattern, other minor differences on the reverse seem to be due to heavy die polishing which has detached the dragon's left foreleg from its body, as well as the 3 spines a few millimetres below, toned nearly uncirculated.

China, collector copies, silver one dollar (cf.K-21, W-557), (26.92g) (39.58mm). Minor differences in the dragon's horns and in the spines/whiskers around its face, and above all in its dorsal spines, which are not thorn-shaped as they usually are but shaped like barbs, the obverse of this coin appears to be identical to the Wenchao coin, except that it has a few less dentils, toned nearly uncirculated.

Ex Dr L.J. Sherwin Collection, from Spink & Son, January 13, 1984 with their ticket.

These emergency gold rupees were struck during the siege of Multan in 1848. This is established by the Commissioner at Amritsar reported in 1864 "When Mulraj was besieged in Multan (September 1848 - 22 January 1849) being short of silver to pay his troops, but having 40 lakhs of rupees hoarded in gold, he coined the whole of it into pieces which passed for one rupee. It however seems unlikely that he had the equivalent of 4,000,000 rupees or 2600 kgs of gold at his disposal. Mundarka means siege and thus the expression is used to signify the reason for the striking of these interesting tiny siege coins.
