The Attenborough hoard was found at Attenborough near Nottingham in 1966. It was published in full in the British Numismatic Journal Volume XXXVIII (1969) pages 50-83. This hoard of 1102 coins, considered as one of the most important hoards found in the 20th century, was buried in 1420. Coins of Edward I-III included in this hoard had been in circulation for up to 130 years and tend to be worn to a weight that is corresponding by weight loss to the current Henry V coins in circulation at the time of the hoard's burial. All coins were individually numbered in the BNJ account and the BNJ notes on p.59 that all the coins had been photographed by the British Museum.
