The pass bears the plain gold Crown of Queen Victoria and as such could only be used by the Governor or a senior member of Government. The Gold Pass befits the momentous occasion of the opening of the Railway and would give the Governor or senior government leaders free travel between the colonies. The quality and cost of making the pass is evident by the intricate and minute screw pins holding the hand beaten Crown onto the main mounting. The gold content is in excess of any listed gold Railway Pass issued in subsequent years. It shows little sign of use particularly the case and its clasp and was probably used only at the time of the inaugural run of the first train in 1887. Traditionally all Railway Passes bearing the Crown of Monarch were scrapped upon the demise of the Monarch and the gold reused to produce replacement passes bearing the new Crown.

Citation: On November 30th, 1907, Mr Stapleton was informed that his next-door-neighbour, a man named Cleaver, had shot at his wife with a revolver. On going inside, Mrs Cleaver asked him not to leave, as her husband would certainly kill her. While walking to the dining room, Cleaver came from the kitchen, and fired point blank at him, wounding him in the left breast. Despite the injury, Mr Stapleton bravely closed with the man, and succeeded in overpowering and disarming him, and subsequently assisted in conveying him to the lockup. A very early and rare 17th Century time piece. The founder of this famous clock and watch making family was William Dent (1624-1703). Both William and Edward John Dent were celebrated clock makers. E.J. made the clock for the Royal Exchange, London and received the order for Big Ben which was completed by his stepson Frederick. William's watch and Edward's barometer (see lot 1221) provide interesting historical linkage to these family giants of the industry spanning some 200 years.
