The sixth issue one pound purportedly ceased being issued in 1916. The illustrated example in his book 'Bank of New Zealand Banknotes 1861-1934' was no doubt an early 'specimen' for the issue and shows a lettered prefix in contrast to the above note. Robb indicates (in his 2006 draft catalogue) that the un-lettered notes were issued from 1902-1904. The date in pencil at the top of the note makes this as confirmed. It now seems that the first notes from the sixth issue which started in 1902 had no prefix letter 'A' and that notes from the end of the series had serial letters. See footnote from Sale 91 (lot 2593) where a different analysis was made on the issues with and without letter prefixes.

In his book 'The Japanese Occupation of Malaya (Singapore) and its Currency', Wong Hon Sum outlines the circumstances of this interesting rarity. 'The British forces began air dropping these leaflets over Malaya and Singapore in late 1944 or early 1945 and the Japanese had not surrendered by then. As such, the people were afraid to be caught in possession of these leaflets, resulting in their rarity today. The Malay words WANG JEPUN AKAN MATI BERSAMA2 JEPUN written obliquely across the face of the note mean 'The Japanese invasion money will perish with the demise of the Japanese'. The back of the leaflet carries notices in Malay, Jawi and Chinese printed in red. The Chinese version reads: 'The Japanese had been driven out of Burma and their invasion notes had been annulled. But the British Burmese currency is still legal tender. When the British return to Malaya, the Straits currency will retain its value, but the Japanese invasion currency will perish together with the demise of the Japanese'. These leaflets were printed by the British Psychological Warfare Division in Calcutta, and there is a serial number at the bottom of the Jawi text on its back - SMA/39'.
